Comments:

The submitter's written descriptions of appearance, vocalizations, and habitat are consistent with Swainson's Warbler (although characteristic bill size and shape are not mentioned), and the submitter has prior visual and aural experience with this species. I am voting to accept this record on the basis of the written description.

Comments:

Given the combination of the clear written description, decades-long observer experience, and clear description of the song heard (including comparison to Louisiana Waterthrush song), I vote to accept. At least to me, the most obvious confusion species candidates in terms of appearance are Worm-eating Warbler and Carolina Wren, and the most obvious confusion species in terms of song type is Louisiana Waterthrush. In my estimation, Domazlicky has sufficiently eliminated all three of these species in her written documentation.
