Comments:

I think some better details could have been provided? Even though this could have been the same bird reported by Biss, the documentation on this bird (-121) seems lacking.

Comments:

The written documentation on the eBird checklist for this record is weak. But since this bird might be the same individual as in record 2020-120, I am voting, with hesitation, to accept this record.

Comments: A little too sparse of a description for me, despite being seen later in the day by Richard Biss. A description ruling out Turkey Vulture would be nice. I would love to revisit this one with a more detailed description.

Comments: This may well be a Black Vulture (it may be the same bird as 2020-120) but the minimal description simply isn't sufficient.

Comments:

Could have been same bird as 2020-120, but the eBird details are inadequate to accept for a stand-alone record.

Comments:

This could very well be a Black Vulture, and possibly is the same bird as in 2020-120 seen an hour to four hour earlier (2020-120 was seen at 11:30 AM; this individual seen sometime during 12:47 to 4:17 PM) not all that far away.

However, the very brief description in this checklist is not enough for me to think that Turkey Vulture, or even some other raptor, has been adequately excluded as a possibility.
